October Update:
Celebrating National Days of Writing & Art

October is the perfect time to celebrate creativity and expression, so we are highlighting two special days for our learners. October 20th is the National Day on Writing, a day to celebrate the written word as a powerful tool that has shaped humanity and history. Then, on October 25th, we break out our paints, pencils, and imagination to celebrate National Art Day and marvel at the incredible feats of human creativity.

To celebrate National Art Day, our Exploring Art course is the perfect way for your child to explore their creativity. In this course, students will:

- Discover a variety of artistic media and techniques, from classic drawing to new digital formats.
- Engage in hands-on, project-based activities to create two-dimensional, three-dimensional, and digital artworks.
- Learn about different art forms, from historical to contemporary.
- Develop a personal connection to their artwork and understand its impact on the world.

This course builds a strong foundation in the visual arts, preparing students for more advanced studies.

Maintaining Consistency Through the Coming Months

As Spooky Season approaches, it's important to keep your child's learning on track, even through the inevitable sugar rushes and costume excitement! Lincoln Learning has resources to help. Our blog, High-Dosage Tutoring: Consistency That Drives Results, explains how a consistent tutoring approach helps kids maintain their attention, focus, and commitment to learning. This method is an excellent way to keep learners engaged and progressing, even with distractions all around.

Visit our Tutoring for Families page to explore how our tutoring options provide consistent, focused support. Our approach encourages your child's own effort and helps them stay on track.
